Every February is National Children's Dental Health Month. Within a month, the American Dental Association (ADA) is sponsoring a campaign to raise awareness of the importance of good oral hygiene for children. Children have 20 primary teeth, also called milk teeth or milk teeth, at birth, although none of them are visible. Teeth usually start to erupt from the gums when the child is 4 to 7 months old. By the time most children are about 3 years old, they have a complete set of primary teeth. They start to lose these teeth when their permanent teeth start pushing their way through the gums for about 6 years. Adults have 32 permanent teeth. There are four different types of teeth. The incisors are four upper and lower teeth. Fangs - teeth on both sides of the incisors. There are two on top and two at the bottom. Bicuspid - These are teeth next to fangs. They are sometimes called premolars. There are four bicuspid on top and four at the bottom. Molars - After the bicuspid come molars. There are four on top and four at the bottom. The last four molars to come out are called wisdom teeth. They come when people between the ages of 17 and 21. Many people need to have their wisdom teeth surgically extracted. It is important that children learn how to properly care for their teeth. Some ways to do this include: Children should brush their teeth at least twice a day, in the morning and before going to bed. Cleaning after every meal is even better! Use fluoride toothpaste and a small soft toothbrush. Floss twice a day to remove plaque. The plaque is a film that is formed on the teeth. It contains bacteria that can cause gum disease if not removed. Eat a healthy, balanced diet. The history of dental care is interesting. There are records of ancient cultures such as Egypt and Greece having dental practices. They used substances such as twigs, pumice, talc, and ground hoof oxen to clean their teeth. Anytime it is a good time for children to learn how to maintain proper oral hygiene.
